

OBJECTIVES

These privileged themes:

First and foremost are the cultures, civilizations and languages of cross-border spaces, the languages of the neighbor, some of them minorised. What are the markers and what is the structuring of identities, what are the evolutions and the dynamics, the linguistic policies? In this diversified and global approach, we are also interested in history, institutions, societies and their evolution, their changes, past or present, with, in particular, the study of the institutional and social norms that structure them, which constrains them or that they arouse, according to the cases and according to the times. The Catalan area is privileged.

What are the evolutions and reciprocal influences in spaces that have both common elements and differentiated situations, be they states, social diversity or indigenous or immigrant communities?

RECERC is interested in the border, the border in society, the passage, be it identities in touch, social changes, cross-border relations.

AIMS:

RECERC is a resolutely transdisciplinary electronic journal open to various fields and insights and to scientific debate in all languages. She wants to connect researchers, approaches and areas. It is affiliated to the Institut d'Estudis Catalans, the Catalan Academy of Arts and Sciences. Its distribution is international.